

...the Sachsenklemme

It was in the year 1809 that the Tyrolean people no longer wished to accept Bavarian and French rule. For this reason, the “Schützen” (a militia of marksmen) marched to the Bergisel four times to liberate their state capital, Innsbruck—and with it, all of Tyrol—from foreign domination.

In May 1809, the Tyroleans succeeded for the second time in expelling the Bavarians from Innsbruck. On August 4th, angry French troops marched south through the narrow Eisack Gorge to punish the rebellious Tyroleans. Here, at this very spot, the Tyrolean marksmen were not waiting for a refreshing Hofer beer and a hearty Brotzeit (snack); they were waiting for the approaching enemy, ready to greet them with stones and tree trunks.

Sensing the “danger from above,” the French decided to send their Saxon allies ahead into the ravine. That was when the avalanche of stones came crashing down. The Saxons found themselves in serious trouble—hence the place is still called “Sachsenklemme” (“Saxon Trap”) today. Around 500 men are believed to have been killed, either crushed by rocks or shot by the Tyrolean “Schützen.” Just a few weeks later, the Tyroleans defeated the Bavarians and the French at the Bergisel for the third time. However, after the fourth battle at the Bergisel was lost, the Tyrolean leader Andreas Hofer was forced to flee his home in the Passeier Valley in early November. He was later captured there by French troops and held in a mountain hut. Court-martialled, he was executed by firing squad on February 20th, 1810, in the Italian town of Mantua.

This chapter of Tyrolean history accompanies you throughout the restaurant, brought to life through the light-hearted caricatures of Jochen Gasser (www.jochengasser.com). The brewery’s patron, Andreas Hofer, is the central figure—appearing on beer glasses, barrels, and T-shirts alike. His subtly integrated presence creates a traditional, cozy beer-drinking atmosphere, complemented by modern architecture.
